Background

The PPP is linked to pilots’ Spraysafe accreditation to provide an ongoing currency requirement to that accreditation.

The starting point for new entrants to the industry will remain the successful completion of the Spraysafe exam for pilots. Once a pilot has achieved their initial accreditation by passing the Spraysafe exam, they will be issued with an accreditation that will be current for three years. During that three year period the accredited pilot can either participate in the PPP and attain the necessary points, or at the end of three years they can resit a Spraysafe exam.

The program will have a robust verification system for pilots claiming they have complied with requirements - AAAA will maintain sign-in books for those events it directly controls such as conferences and courses that can count towards the PPP, and pilots can either provide documentary evidence of achievement of credits (such as certificates etc), or can have their Chief Pilot sign-off that they have in fact achieved what they are claiming.
